Infectious diseases have been a constant threat to humankind with plagues, leprosy, the Black Death in the Middle Ages, the 1918 “Spanish Flu” pandemic, and the HIV/AIDS pandemic introduced in the 1980s.<sup>1</sup> Unfortunately, this trend has not decreased. New diseases continue to emerge, such as severe acute respiratory syndrome-associated coronavirus, avian influenza, and West Nile virus, along with the resurgence of more resistant and virulent pathogens, such as tuberculosis, malaria, Clostridium difficile, Staphylococcus aureus, Klebsiella species, and Enterococcus species.

In 2002, infectious and parasitic diseases were listed as the second leading cause of death worldwide, with approximately 15 million deaths (26%) directly attributed to them and many more that may have been indirectly caused by an infection. Infectious diseases remain the third leading cause of death in the United States.<sup>1</sup>
